

Are you thinking about law school? Do you care about progressive values?

Learn how you can combine these passions with the American Constitution Society (ACS), the nation's largest progressive legal network.

ACS empowers law students, lawyers, judges, scholars, and policymakers to work together to ensure that the Constitution and the law work for all people. Our members are at the forefront of the movements for criminal justice, the right to vote, women's health, and other progressive efforts.

With a chapter at virtually every law school in the country, and lawyer chapters in nearly 50 cities, ACS provides a forum for law students to address issues they care about but may not discuss in the classroom. In 2018, our chapters hosted events regarding what's at stake at the U.S. Supreme Court, and led efforts to cancel classes and promote civic engagement on election day. They taught about the U.S. Constitution in K-12 classrooms across the country, and volunteered on a number of projects to help hold our government accountable to the rule of law.

The ACS network helps law students with their professional development and career search, too, providing the opportunity to connect with judges, attorneys, advocates, and academics. Many ACS members attest that our network was key to the pursuit of their career!
